Invitation

Healthcare is an integral part of human life where people try to adopt innovative products and procedures for their healthy life. The advancement in the healthcare system over the past century is largely due to the ongoing innovations in medical science and technology. The delivery of modern healthcare system depends on an expanding interdisciplinary team of trained professionals from vast areas of biomedicine and materials science. It is, therefore, very important to have a close interaction of material scientists, biologists, pharmacologists and medical practitioners, so that a well defined goal and direction may be pursued towards the healthcare scenario for the world community.

Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) Delhi and Jamia Hamdard (Hamdard University), New Delhi, are organising International Congress on Advances in Human Healthcare Systems 'Healthcare India 2012' at New Delhi during February 20-23, 2012. This event is being organized under the auspices of Asian Polymer Association (APA). The Congress involves very innovative domains of polymeric materials, pharmaceutical sciences and biomedical applications' along with microsymposiums on three areas of nanotechnology, tissue engineering and innovations in polymer industry. This Congress is proposed to exchange information on new dimensions in healthcare systems and would address the healthcare priorities as well as would help in formulating the action plan to face the challenges ahead in biomedical technology. The joint interaction of the academic institutions and industrial houses would make the event more dynamic and fruitful in terms of scientific and technological innovations. This Congress on healthcare offers a very focused platform for the stakeholders to discuss, analyse and bring out policy and joint working groups in these areas. We would like to extend our invitation for your participation in Healthcare India 2012 at New Delhi. Your presence in this event would make it very dynamic and interactive for the delegates and we look forward to welcome you at New Delhi.
